Half Damages for the James

trict Court yesterday held that in the collision of the Standard Oil tanker James McGee and the Shipping Foard steamship Lake City on October 3, 1918, "both vessels failed adequately to discharge the responsibilities incumbent upon them, with disassrous results." The decision was on a petition of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, owner of the McGee, which sought exemption from damages. Judge Knox said:

"Each vessel was brought into jeopardy by her own fault and that of the other, and it follows that a decree for half damages may pass."

The James McGee was valued at more than $2,000,000, and the claims filed against the tanker aggregated less than $1,500,000.

In other than grain business virtually uniform dullness prevails. The outward coal market from this side continues dormant and it is evident that coal prices will have to undergo considerable readjustment before local exporters can hope to get foreign orders.

No sugar business whatever is being done, though the tonnage is available. A limited demand for small steamers for round voyages to the West indies on the time charter form is in evidence, but there is no improvement in rates. The lumber trade is without special character.
